U.K. Strike Crippling Industry

Worker Layoffs Are Widespread

By Alvin Shuster LONDON, Peb. 14 (NYT).— Eritish industry was severely crip-pled today when several hundred thousand workers were suspended from their jobs as government orders limiting the use of electricity in factories went into ef-

With the national coal strike now in its 36th day, Britain shivered and stumbled through an other day and right of blackouts. Many workers and not learn they were laid off until they turned up at factories this morning Others, who might have worked never arrived because of canceled electric train services.

54 Million Perished in Wars From 1600 to 1945, UN Says.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Feb. 14 (AP).—A new UN study esti-mates that 54 million persons died in military service in the wars between the year 1600 and the end of World War II.

But the: 78-page book, "The World Population Situation in 1970," concludes that wars, famines and endemies together have slowed down population growth by only about 10 years.

Queting a Soviet author, it says that from 1800 to 1945, four million military personnel died of natural causes and 50 million in battle or from wounds, diseases, accidents or other war-induced

Of the 54 million, 30 million died in World War II, between 1939 and 1945—an average of 11.1 military deaths a year for every 1,000 total population.

The second highest number, 9.1 million, died in World War I, between 1914 and 1918-53 military deaths a year from every 1,000

The Third Highest

The third highest toll; five million, was taken in the French Revolutionary and Napoleonic wars of 1789 to 1815, amounting to one a year for every 1,000 peo-

On top of all that, the study points out, there must have been "war - induced . mortality large civilians stemming - in ing targets of attack and in ear-lier periods from the epidemics, famines and pillage that came in the train of war.

It cites evidence that famines and epidemics in themselves act as a drag on population growth.
It notes that on the indian subcontinent, population increased only 3 to 4 million in the decades including the 1878-78 floods and epidemics, the 1892 and 1897 famines and the 1918 influence epidemic, compared with 24 million and 19 million in the two intervening decades.

Ravages Bestored Because of 1945 postwar food shortages, it says, "many hun-dreds of thousands died in Europe who might otherwise have lived longer." 'The ravages of war, famine or epidemic have been devastat-ing indeed," the book says. "Even so, the setbacks which they have caused in population size have often been restored within only a few years by the sheer inertia of normal fertility and mortality trends. By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14 (IHT) .- Three days before departing for Peking, President Nixon today lifted some curbs on American trade with China, giving the People's Republic the same standing among this country's trace partners as the Soviet Union.

When the envelopes containing the lists of four sites were opened on Jan. 31, there proved to be no common venue. Mr. Euwe

200 Students Fight Police In Barcelona

BARCELONA, Feb. 14 (AP).— Militant Barcelona University students battled police with Molotov cocktails and rocks today in the letest outbreak of student unrest in Spain.

The disorder came with main campuses shut down at Barcelona, Madrid and Valencia and a few hours before Education Minister Jose Luis Villar Palasi was to go before the Cortes (parliament) to explain a new education law.

In Barcelona, some 200 students armed with fire bombs and rocks streamed into the center of the city, chanted for Mr. Villar Palasi to resign, hurled rocks at police, burned a private car and fled to side streets as club-swing-ing police closed in. There were no immediate reports on the number of arrests or injuries.

Six faculties, including the medicine school, the focal point of student unrest at Madrid University three weeks ago, have been closed at Barcelona University since Friday. The shutdown has idled an estimated 40,000

Student sources in Barcelona promised fresh protests with a possibility that dissident workers might join in.

In Madrid, authorities closed the central campus today to its 50,000 students as homage to a philosophy professor who suffered a fatal heart attack while reportedly arguing with students

In Valencia, the campus has been closed to its 10,000 students since a student-police clash Peb. 4 injured seven police and led to the arrest of 67 students.

The new education law, in -ffect for more than a year, was widely halled by education leaders when announced. But it has since drawn widespread criticism because the government has made little headway in putting it into effect. One section, for example, calls for free secondary education, but little funding has been available and many parents must still pay for private schooling.

President Makarios has twice refused to the Greek government's suggestions that he surrender the Czech arms, an official announcement in Athens said tonight.

The announcement by the Greek press secretariat said that Athens had earlier recommended that President Makarios hand over the arms to be stored by the Cyprus National Guard-which is under the control of a Greek general and entirely officered by Greek regular officers.

President Makarios refused to accept this recommendation, the Athens announcement said.

"A second similar demarche was also rejected by President Makarios," the announcement added. It was then that the Greek government demanded that the arms should be placed immediately under the control of the UN peacekeeping force, according to the Athens statement

'Acute Crisis'

"The scute crisis that shakes the Greek-Cypriots is well known," it added "It is necessary to prevent a resort to violence."

The Athens statement said that distribution of the imported arms "for use in the internal Greek-Cypriot front" would constitute an act of national disaster be-cause it would lead "to fraticide and to destruction."

The Greek government was to-day anxiously awaiting a reply from Cyprus to its message, and officials in Athens voiced hope that the door would be left open for further negotiations with President Makarios.

The United States and Britain are making intensive efforts to defuse the crisis, the Cyprus sources said.

It is feared that civil war may erupt between supporters of President Makarios and those of Gen.

The gravity of the situation was underlined by a warning in the newspaper Mesimvrini, regarded as the mouthpiece of the colonels in Cyprus, that there would be bloodshed if the Communists attempted to stage a public rally in support of President Makarios. The UN secretary-general'a spe-

Gen. Grivas a conspirator. "He has a right to remain in hiding if he so wishes" he added Though the Cyprus government denies the importation of Czech arms, it is an open secret the Petros Christodoulides, 25, was fatally wounded by an explosion in the yard of his home in the Larnaca district village of Ora. Police found three unexploded water-pipe bombs in the yard, the statement added.

Britain Concerned LONDON, Feb. 14 (AP).-Government sources today expressed Britain's concern at reports accepted by officials here—that President Makarles has imported arms from Czechoslovakia.

Informants said the British are urgently discussing ways of controlling the dangerous situation with several countries-in-cluding Cyprus itself, Greece, Turkey and the United States.

Britain, Turkey and Greece are guarantors of the independence and sovereignty of the Mediterranean island under a 1960 agreement signed at Zurich following Britain's granting of independence to Cyprus. There has been no move by any government to invoke the Zurich guarantees.

Turkey Is Silent ANKARA, Feb. 14 (Reuters).— Turkey's Foreign Ministry today declined formal comment on the dispute between the Greek and Cyprus government, but informed sources said developments in Nicosia were being closely followed. The sources said Turkey does not want to be involved unless there is a threat to the Turkish minority in Cyprus. Manila Blast Kills 16

Mrs. Irving's Extradition Is Demanded

Formal Swiss Request Sent to U.S. by Courier

NEW YORK, Feb. 14 (UPI),-Swiss authorities today formally demanded the extradition of Mrs. Edith Irving, while a federal grand jury here kept Nina van Pallandt, the "other woman" in the Rughes autobiography case, waiting for her turn to clarify Clifford Irving's story. In Bern, the Federal Justice and Police Ministry announced it had dispatched a nine-page demand to Washington by diplomatic courier for the return of Mrs. Irving, a Swiss citizen. She is wanted here for prosecution on charges of fraud and passport Gerold Luethy, Zurich's chief prosecutor, denied American newspaper reports that Swiss and U.S. officials had agreed to drop charges against Mrs. Irving if the Irvings give back $650,000 in publishers' payments for the book. Mr. Luethy stressed that "we would not be allowed to make such an agreement" under

No Deal, Swiss Say

Arthur Bachman, a member of the Zurich cantonal government responsible for justice and police affairs, said that if such a deal were suggested, he would veto it. Mrs. Irving, whose husband said he collaborated with Howard R. Hughes in writing Mr. Hughes's memors, deposited the publisher's payments to "H.R. Hughes" in a bank in Switzerland, using the name Heiga R. Hughes, and later withdraw the cash.

Time magazine, sister publication of Life, which was to have serialized the Hughes book prior to publication by McGraw-Hill Books, said yesterday that Mr. Irving "lifted" material for the autobiography from soon-to-be-published memoirs of a former Hughes aide.

The side, Noah Dietrich, of Los Angeles, had collaborated with investigative reporter James Phelan, of long Beach, Calif. on the original book, and it was Mr. Phelan who first noticed last week a similarity of published episodes in the Irving book to episodes in Mr. Dietrich's.

Manuscripts Compared

Close comparison of the two muscripts by Mr. Phelan and McGraw-Hill and Life editors here destroyed Mr. Irving's claim that his material came directly from Mr. Hughes in 100 hours of taped interviews last year. Mr. Phelan said today in a television-interview that he tried to help McGraw-Hill as long ago as Dec. 6 by exposing Mr. Eving's book.

Another Royal Navy Tradition May Walk the Plank-Tattoos

LONDON, Feb. 14 (AP).—The daily rum ration has cone, belibottoms are going, nod now the Royal Navy's tradition of tattoos is threatened.

It could be bad for the health, say navy doctors. Britain's satiers, who are shedding traditions as a new recruit sheds hair, have always liked tattops. Some muscular tars have been content with a discreet "Mum" unoblussively lettered on a west.

Others have gone in for the full treatment with maked indies, albatress, sailing ships, mermaids, and unchors inked in at strategic points on their bodies.

But now navel medical officers say six recent cases of serum hepatitis, a liver disease, could have been caused by dirty tattooing needles contaminating the blood.

BONN, Feb. 14 (Reuters).-West Germans who applauded the abolition of capital punishment for murder some 20 years ago are beginning to have second thoughts as the country's crime rate soars.

Where Has All the Power Gone?

Fallodon, are going out all over Britain, and when or whether they will go on again depends very largely upon the National Mineworkers Union. The nation has been warned that an almost complete blackout, and a complete shutdown of industry, impends, unless the coal miners go back to work and electric power can be produced; the miners, who initially demanded an increase of nearly half their present pay and have now reduced that to a quarter, insist they will stay out until the Coal Board and the government "see reason."

During two world wars, the German submarine fleet and air forces tried vainly to accomplish as much industrial disruption as British coal miners, with backing from some other unions, have accomplished in about five weeks. Moreover, the issue is not one between workers' wages and corporate profits; Britain's nationalized coal industry is a community enterprise, whose costs are vital elements in determining whether the nation can produce profitably. With an unfavorable trade balance and rising unemployment, the cost of coal represents an acute and basic national interest.

In the United States, the issues between the unions and the national interest are often obscured by corporate profits. Such profits, of course, are taxed on several levels -corporate income, individual income from dividends, and profits from stock sales. But labor can usually argue that it is dealing with wealthy corporations, rather than the nation as a whole. This has been one of the rhetorical stumbling blocks in attempt-

The lights, to paraphrase Lord Grey of ing to keep down the level of wage increases under Phase 2. Yet it is to be noted that an increasing number of strikes against government_federal, state or local_are occurring, and also that in instances where there is a very distinct national interest. such as the dock strikes, it is the union clout that has generally prevailed

> The days when crowds of haggard workers stormed at lines of military protecting the entrances of strikebreakers into factories have long since passed in most industrial societies. Striking workers and their families do not starve, nor are their places taken by scabs on any permanent basis. The risks and costs to the workers of a strike have been greatly-and nearly everyone will admit, justly-diminished. But what is the community to do when its interests are imperilled by a work stoppage—when a state like Hawaii is cut off from shipments by sea through the actions of longshoremen: when policemen, firemen or hospital workers refuse their duties; when wage rates threaten the whole economy?

The British coal miners say that the current court of inquiry findings would be accepted—if satisfactory to the union members; otherwise the strike would continue. George Meany, head of the American AFL-CIO, has emphasized his total opposition to compulsory arbitration—that apparent last recourse of the community. And as for civil servants, paid by the government, can their wages be determined by any other agency than government itself? Union labor has acquired great power in critical areas of community life. Is there any countervailing power with the community?

Prospects in Peking

the first Chinese-American summit, "primarily dialogue" rather than "negotiation" will take place. His warning reflects the essential purpose and the unavoidable uncertainty of this first such meeting. It should help reassure America's allies that the President is not out to do business at their expense. And it should spare him the charge of coming home "empty-handed."

Evidence and the general awareness mount, however, that Mr. Nixon will not come home "empty-handed." He will return first of all as the President who broke a historic barrier and actually traveled to Peking, a fact whose political significance is underlined by China's agreement (in itself a big favor to Mr. Nixon) to admit a large can friends on the rim pay the costs of that the apparatus that will enable the President to appear live on American television from China. Moreover, Mr. Nixon binted last week that in addition to a final communique there might be announcements "during the course of the meetings" on "questions of agenda, what will be discussed and so forth." We have been accustomed to seeing presidential candidates campaign in Moscow. Mr. Nixon is the first to add Peking to the

A second kind of result the President seems to expect are such symbols and channels of ongoing Sino-American communication as exchanges of cultural groups or fournalists, a "shadow" form of diplomatie representation perhaps in the form of a trade mission, a possible reciprocal invitation for Premier Chou En-lai, and so on. These will formalize and to a point institutionalize the personal opening made by Mr. Nixonan important consideration in that neither he nor Mr. Chou can be assured of indefinite tenure in high office. They will also serve what is surely the gut purpose of this

Mr. Nixon is quite right to warn that, at journey for both host and guest; to give each more balance-of-power bargaining leverage in its separate dealings with the Soviet Union. A visit which did not provide for at least token broadening and continuation of Chinese-American ties would be a Soviet "victory," strengthening the Kremlin's hand in dealing with both Washington and Peking.

Finally, discussions will unquestionably be conducted on the political adjustments which must take place on China's Pacific rim in the years to come if the Sino-American relationship is to be more than gloss. For the United States the problem is to ease off a generation's devotion to the "containment" of China without making the Americhange. For China the toward a new Pacific balance with the United States, which is at once a present adversary on its ocean side but a potential ally of a sort on its Soviet side.

We cannot see now either the United States or China would act toward Vietnam in a way that its Vietnamese client could not abide. As for Korea, Chou En-lai has already indicated interest in activating a diplomatic process including the United States; some further movement could come here. Japan. because of its huge power and its changing mood, represents problems so important and complex for both that no more than introductory talks can be anticipated. The Nixon course on Taiwan—to help defend it if necessary, meanwhile encouraging the contending Chinese to work out their own future peaceably-has already been set: a token gesture to that end may be forthcoming.

In any event, the President has been prudent in not raising expectations too high as he sets off for Peking. We wish his undertaking well.

By Chalmers M. Roberts

game plan in this election year is truly a Rube Goldberg contraption of items both foreign and domestic. If it succeeds in bringing victory next Nov. 7 the game plan will go down in the books as the best act since Mr. Nixon's secret hero. Harry S Truman, pulled off his 1948 coup or maybe even since Blondin walked that high wire across Niagara Falls back in great-great grandpa's day.

Timing has always been a Nixon political specialty and the key to its success, when it has succeeded, has been what he calls peaking at the right moment, not too soon or not too late. In short, each cog has to fit the other and the ensuing whirl has to be timed just right by election day.

On the domestic front the President has two key items. One is a reviving economy, a sense of movement forward and upward that the voter has in his mind when be enters the polling place. If unemployment is still between five and six percent, well, most

Role of Wallace .

The other domestic item concerns Gov. George Wallace of Alabama. His chore is to raise hell within the Democratic party but not to run this time as a third-party candidate. On the first score Wallace is well on the way, as the Florida primary already is demonstrating, As things look now he probably will come to the Miami Beach convention next July with a big batch of delegates and consequently create scene much to Mr. Nixon's liking. As to whether Wallace then will try another third-party race, we shall have to wait and see. He and the Republicans deny a deal; But I can't forget the way the President responded to Dan. Rather in that television in-

One siready visualizes the President and Chairman Mao in living color and Mr. Nixon atop the Great Wall of China pointing in some distant direction but hopefully not north, where there are so many Soviet troops. It is doubtful that anything substantive will be announced in Peking, but the very fact of making peace, if only in principle, with the ancient Chinese enemy will seem pretty sweet to most

End of an Ideology

By Anthony Lewis

I ONDON.—There is very little panic in Britain as the coal strike, gradually darkens the streets and stops industry for want of electric power. The well-known British phlegm in the face of crisis is admirable. But it cannot conceal the troubling for established political and economic ideas.

It is the first national coal strike since 1926—an ominous date. The miners then began what turned into the General Strike. That terrible struggle was a symptom of breakdown in the system: Trade wars abroad and ignorant economic policies at home that led to depression and mass unemployment.

We believe that we have come a long way since 1926 in economic sophistication and in the diffusion of political power. have, but the new coal strike in Britain may be a sign that once again changes in the forces shaping society have outrun our thinking.

Community Pie

The first thing to recognize is that this is not a strike in the old sense at all—a test of strength between capital and labor. It is a struggle by one group in the community, the miners, for a larger share of the community

The phenomenon is not new. We have realized in recent years that monopolistic industry simply passes on to the customer the price it pays to end a labor dispute. A fight between the automobile workers and General Motors is not about who gets what share of the industry's profits but about how much inflation will be exported to the community. The real interest at stake is the public's. But the coal strike puts the issue with dramatic clarity. The industry is nationalized, and the governing board will give the miners whatever the government allows Everyone knows that the cost will immediately be passed on to the public, in higher prices for coal. That is why Prime Minister Heath spoke of the potential damage to the "silent pickets in our society"-the poor, the old and others on fixed incomes who would have to pay more for coal.

So far there has been remarkably little public resentment directed at the miners. Britons on the whole must sympathize with the miners, must feel that their unpleasant work and historic place in the wage structure entitle them to a big increase

The government has resisted because it knows that the inflationary cost to the whole economy could be deadly. It is easy of the words and say The man to say that the miners are a is the style." Politicians do not admit it yet, but some day soon people will be aware that the upward curve of production will have to be stopped if we want to avoid a natural calamity on earth. Human beings will still be able to yearn for more education, more leisure, more beautybut not rationally for more

Seen in that light, the British coal strike is a foretaste of the difficult decisions required of a society without growth. How is sible to determine whether a miner should earn more, in justice, than an electrician or a

Censorship By Newsmen

By Ronald M. Dworkin

ONDON-There is a dangerous kind of censorship, now growing in force in both America and England, that does not rely on legal restraints on what may be said. It appeals instead to the idea that the press, television and other media have a professional responsibility to exercise their legal freedom with kell. restraint, because their power to inform and persuade sometimes includes the power to embarress or even cripple national policy. The American press has been widely criticized, for example, for publishing the Pentagon Papers and the records of the Nixon administration's discussions of the Indo-Pakistani war, felevision has been criticized for giving publicity to demonstrators, and for subverting morale by report. ing the most distosteful aspects of the Indochina wars.

In England, the Home Secretary criticized the BBC for a television discussion that gave a voice to Republican critica of British policy in Ulster on the ground that the program would aggravate an already incendiary situation; and the Tory pres said that the BBC was trying to usurp Parliament's authority.

This sort of criticism may be the edge of the wedge, because it may be backed by Agnew-like hints that if the media cannot govern themselves others may have to govern them. But the very fact that legal censorship is too foreign to our tradition makes the appeal to self-restrains attractive and therefore more

The appeal is based on a falla-cious analogy between the rights of ordinary citizens and the duty of the press. Newsmen exercis their rights to speak not as individual citizens, who may give up their rights in what they think is a good cause, but as trustees for the rest of us. ..

We are equally cheated when the man who decides what we shall not know is a newspaper rather than a bureaucrat; perhaps more cheated, because the bureaucrat's decision can be exposed and challenged in court and the editor's cannot be. The cliche that the media have responsibility as well as power advances the argument hardly at all. Their underlying responsibility is to those who want to read or watch them, and the question is when this important responsibility may be set aside in favor of some other one.

It is often said that the media must not broadcast information that will harm the community, that they must not act like Justice Holmes's man who cried "fire" in a crowded theater. But this is not beloful when, as is almost always the case, the community is not agreed about what is harmful and what is not.

Perhaps

We can distinguish easy cases: Of course it would be wrong for the a newspaper to publish information about troop movements in. wartime, because that would cause harm that is not subject to political debate. erament policy in Vietnam or Ulster is a very different case, bowever-just because the United States and Britain are in fact divided, as a matter of political debate, on whether that policy ought to succeed. Perhaps the United States' interests are harmed if television coverage makes the war more difficult to pursue because it hardens the enemy or confuses our soldiers. Perhaps British innents of union in Ulster will tolerate violence more readily if they see their extremist beroes on TV. But in each case it is clear that a significant number of citizens' believes that these costs are worth paying if they will help to force a change in policies that these citizens count as more harmful still. That proposition, for better or worse; now lies within the area of political controversy, and it cannot be the part of the media to take it out

The newspapers and television must make every effort to report fairly, and to present a balance of opinion. It may be that genuine objectivity is an impossible ideal, especially on televi-sion, where the choice of one mage as more accurate than antudes as well as hard facts, But we are better off asking our vamen to pursue the ideal, as far as they can, rather than to settle for a consorabip that is deliberate and that is, in the nature of the case, always on the same side.

FTC, ICI Agree on Divestiture

The Federal Trade Commission has tentatively adopted a consent order requiring Imperial Chem-ical Industries of Britain to divest the explosives and aerospace components division of Atlas Chemical Industries, of the United States, within three years. ICI acquired Allas last year in a transaction valued at more than $163 million. The agreed-to order would settle an FTG complaint charging that the acquisition violated plant charging that the acquisition violated anti-trust laws by restricting competition in the sale of explosives and related accessories. In London, IGI officials declined immediate comment. However, it is believed ICI is not greatly concerned about the divestiture, particularly as Atlas has forecast that profits from the division would decline as the United States reduces its operations in Vietnam. In 1969, the division accounted for 19 percent of Atlas profits.

But test results so far have proved sufficient reserves to justify development.

U.S. Mutual Fund Sales Top Buying

During the fourth quarter of 1971, more U.S. mutual funds sold stocks on balance than bought, Barron's Financial Weekly reports. Of the 78 investment companies surveyed, 38 ended 1971 in the sell column, against 18 on the buy side; transactions at the rest were indensive: The bearishness was seen successful. bearishness was even stronger than in the preceding three months, when sellers outcombered buyers 32 to 25. The shift in sentiment was particularly pronounced among the stock mutuals, where the number of purchasers was cut in half: from 18 to 9. Six closed end trusts were net sellers, compared with only one in the third quarter. Overall sales topped buying by $207.5 million, or 12.2 percent. In the preceding three months, the gap was less than $15 million. The latest position seems to show many portfolic managers doubted the staying power of the post-Thanksgiving holiday rally on the New York Stock Exchange, which pushed the Dow Jones Industrial average no 120 points.

Westinghouse Claims New OutputSystem

Semiconductors Tested And Stored in Banks

By Gene Smith NEW YORK Peb. 14 (NYT).

Just at a time when many of the giants are phasing out of semiconductor manufacturing, Westinghouse Electric Curp. believes it has a new system that can propel it to the top rank.

The key of this system is a guaranteed delivery of high-power semiconductor products in as little as 54 hours instead of the usual four to six weeks.

J. C. Marous ir., general man-ager of electronic components divisions, said that with conven-tional manufacturing methods, semiconductors could not be fully tested until they were completely Westinghouse has developed a manufacturing system that fully tests each semiconductor element (the silicon wafer that actually performs all electrical functions of the complete device) and then stores the tested elements in an inventory system.

Specially developed test arrays examine and characterize each element in the unassembled final state and the fully tested and coated semiconductor elements are then stored and indexed both by application and by customer. In other words, Westinghouse maintains the customer's inventory.

Prospective users of the system are required to enter into an agreement describing the type and quantity of high-power semiconductors they need and the approximate rate at which they may be required. This reserves space and inventory for them and guarantees quick shipment.

Mr. Marous said that customers would only have to maintain inventories covering 10 days or less to be fully covered. He estimated this inventory costs, under the conventional practices of the industry, an average of 25 percent a year.

It is planned to maintain an inventory of over 1,500 different products.

A little over a month ago, General Electric said it planned to close down one translator plant and to consolidate other facilities. RCA and GTE Sylvania phased tor operations in 1970.

The World Bridge Federation has recently prepared its own master-point scheme, based on performance in international

The compilation of the three W.B.P. ranks—grand master, world master and international master-is not yet complete, but it is already clear that there will be 28 grand masters, eight of whom will be Italian and 12 Amarican:

Heading the grand master list will be Giorgio Belladomna, closely followed by other members of the Italian Bine Team. The leading American is Jim Jacoby. Four Frenchmen, two Englishmen and two Dutchmen are the other eight grand mas-

THREE BAGS FULL Essays in American Fiction

By Philip Young Harcourt Brace Jopanovich 231 pp. $8.91

lection of essays fits into a comfortable pigeomhole, there is great-er variety in it than the category 'American fiction" indicates. The essays range from analysis of single works to his own involvement in the making of the modern canon. He is formidably learned as the papers on the "legend" of Pocahontas and "Rip Van Winkle" show. But what comes through more than the learning is the man, modest, bemused, occasionally astonished at the antics of the literary profession, one who is both actor and spectator and who enjoys both roles. In fact, he may be stirring up once again the troubles that got such play in the columns of the New York Review of Books between Edmund Wilson and Lewis Mumford on the one hand and the gentlemen of the Modern Language Association on the other, over the new and au-thoritative texts of American writers. Although Mr. Young's essay was written in 1985 before the altercation, its publication now in book form may scretch open wounds that have not yet healed. He presents a picture of forious scholarly activity, of Hawthorne's high standing on the campuses and of the out-pouring of books and articles on the man "Everybody wants a piece of the action," he writes, a phrase not usually applied to professorial activity. But in the rush, Hawthorne simehow gets

ALTHOUGH the subtitle of Philip Young's attractive col-

The new edition of Hawthorne now being prepared at Ohio State is letter perfect, but with so much apparatus as to stun the experts. Fredson Bowers, whose high standards of scholarly accuracy are legendary, has charged that the earlier Riverside text is "notori-ously corrupt." Yet Mr. Young and another scholar not named "cannot find a really significant difference between the new text and that of Riverside."

One critic sees "The House of Seven Gables" as "a good deal of a failure"; another characterizes "The Blithedale Romance" as "tantalizing, slippery, finally un-satisfactory." A third can't work up much enthusiasm for "The Marble Faun." Although it is not hard to appreciate the cleverness employed, the net effect is to make the subject of all these essays-Hawthorne himself-disappear. The reader feels himself an outsider in the presence of a whose mystery is closed to those not in the fraternity.

Mr. Young is best known, of course, for his highly praised study of "the traumatic bases for Hemingway's art," and his long opening essay gives a blow-by-blow account of his dealings with that author in the composition of his book. He tells it now with some humor, but there is a rue ful note in the telling that reflect his earlier uncertainties. I who though he had done more to capitaln Hemingway's erratic bahavior. We know, through Mc Young's paraphrases, what Hemingway thought and said and complained about, but there ap-pears to be more to the ups and downs of his decision. Mr. Young says that Hemingway liked to be generous. But it appears that be also had deep fears and great doubts. Was it only his goodelle that made him change his miner

There are three other essays on Hemingway, one that strips A R Hotchner's "Papa Hemingway" all claims to authenticity. On paper, delivered to a group of Peace Corps workers soon to face foreigners who might ask about American literature, deals with the bothersome question as to why American writers latch on to the more sordid and unsavory aspec of American life. His answer thoughtful behind their light heartedness, may not game everyone's agreement, but the abould serve to sharpen one's own arguments in the debate.

The piece on "Huckleher Finn," if I read him aright, op. poses the notion that Huck simply a child of nature, a Ro seau-like innocent who sided wi Jim out of native good, Mr Young's contention is that Hu had seen so much evil and vio lence, which he documents the oughly, that when he did protes Jim, it was a conscious rebellion against the values of the world he had fled from. The most original and thought provoking papers were those on a: the "legend" of Pocahontas and on Washington Irving's "Rip Van Winkle." In both, the stories are traced to earlier forms and to the meaning of these forms to their societies. Fact and fancy are separated in the account of the Indian girl and he explains with here. imaginative verve the peculiar need her story fills in our national psychology. He makes the characteristics answer to the question as to why and Capt. Smith did not many his and rescuer crucial to our understand ing of the place of the legend in the our folklore. It is a stimulating and and challenging reading.

Even more so is the essay of Bert "Rip Van Winkle," a virtuoso et di avirtuoso e to its pagan shape and he shape why it was apt when applied Rip and to the America of it-time. No one who reads it, I think will look on that story as he did by before.

Mr. Lask is a New York Time book reviewer.

SAPPORO, Japan, Feb. 14 (AP).—We've a great deal of trouble winning here."

In the understatement of the Kith Winter Olympics, Jean Beranger, the French ski coach, was talking about the collapse of the vanuted

French Alpine ski team.

When he made that statement, he was still hoping for a gold medal from the men's or women's sislom races. When the last chance disappeared yesterday in the men's sislom on Mount Teine, he said, "What can one say?" The French fall from dizzying heights has been gradual, but the boom of the fallure here was nonetheless resounding.

French men and women ruled the field in the 1986 world championships in Portillo, Chile, capturing 16 of the 24 medals distributed. In the 1968 Olympics on home ground in Gre-noble, eight of the 18 medals went to the French, including four of the six gold. Jean-Claude Killy won three gold medals and Marielle. Goitschel took one. Rosewall, who beat Arthur

Arnold Palmer, the defending champion and four-time wither of this event, was in the thick of the race in the early going, bolting into contention with three consecutive birdies starting on the fifth hole.

But he failed to birdle the par-

Rudolf Kinav, whose poems and stories in Plattdeutsch have been recited by four generations of German schoolchildren.

An 84-Year-Old Crusader

By Harry Stein

HAMBURG (IHT).—There are few constants in the turbulent social history of 20th-century Germany but writer Rudolf Kinau has managed to retain his special niche in German letters from the time of Wilhelm II to that of Willy Brandt. Virtually unknown outside his native country, Kinau's whimsical poems and wry stories. recited by four generations of German schoolchildren, have become a part of the nation's cultural heritage. Their author is also Germany's most durable radio per-sonality, having broadcast his brief weekly program regularly since 1924.

In his own words, Kinau "crept out of the cabbage patch in 1887," which makes him 84 years old, a fact to which he seems totally oblivious. In spite of a full head of snow-white hair, Kinau looks no more than 60 and he has the energy of a 10-year-old. If anything, his work pace has increased in recent years.

Besides writing and broadcasting, Kinau. makes a point of meeting his public. He has made over 7,000 personal appearances, ranging from gatherings of thousands in urban concert halls to meetings of a few dozen at the cultural centers of small farming communities. He has a repertoire of eight separate programs, poems and stories gleaved from his writings, with which he entertains his audiences.

Another Motive

Kingu has another motive in making his tours. A native of Hamburg, where he still lives with his wife of 60 years, he speaks and writes Plattdeutsch, or low German, a dislect common in Schleswig-Holstein, Hanover, Saxony and parts of the Netherlands but barely comprehensible to a great many Germans. He has taken it upon himself to save the dialect from extinction. His absolute refusal to use ordinary German, which everyone assumes he speaks, has been a source of immense irritation to his readers and listeners over the years. Each of his 28 volumes includes a glossary to which the conscientlous non-Plattdeutsch speaker must refer every other page. He has received a great many letters from listeners of his 4 1/2-minute Monday morning radio show, commenting on his inability to speak properly. "My favorite," he says, "is from the man who has listened to me for 30 years while hardly understanding a word. Your babble is perfect, he wrote. 'I cook my eggs by it.'

Kinau's language undoubtedly cuts down the size of the audiences at his personal appearances, which is a shame, for he is a masterful storyteller. Running in place, gesturing broadly with his arms, playing little-boy maliciousness or bureaucratic pomposity, he physically illustrates each of his stories like a practiced mime.

The stories are built around three primary themes, all of which are familiar to his public. There are those that deal with fools and incompetents, not unlike those who populated Sholom Aleichem's fictional town of Chelm. Kinau tells the story, for example, of a village whose people were so dumb that they tried to get rid of eels by drowning them.

Then there are the stories dealing with German schoolchildren, many of them hased on Kingu's own childhood experiences. Among the most popular of these is the tale of the straightlaced teacher telling the tale of Noah and the ark to a class of rapt 7-year-olds. At the end of the lesson the teacher, surveying her pupils with a self-satisfied smile, asked if anyone had a question. "Yes." replied one small boy, expressing a concern of the entire "Who cleaned up the mess the animals made in the bottom of the boat?"

But perhaps the best-known of Kinan's stories are those about his mother, a cantankerous but endearing old lady, who has come to epitomize the proper, nononsense German woman. He frequently tells of an incident that arose when the German Navy decided to name a sailing ship after his brother, Gorch Fock, a popular writer of sea stories who had been killed during World War I: Shortly after the navy's decision was made public, an admiral showed up at the Kinau house to offer the mother his congratulations. Mrs. Kinau, upon opening the door, mistook the stranger in full regalia for a beggar and, muttering under her breath, dropped a 5-piennig piece into his hand. The officer looked at the coin and stammered. But you don't understand. I'm a grand admiral in the German Navy." "T don't care who you are," she snapped, "That's all you're getting."

Radio

Whether Kinau's personal appearances do much for the cause of Platideutsch is, of course, difficult to determine. Obviously he has reached a great many more people over the last half-century through his radio program and he considers himself fortunate that he latched onto the broadcast industry so early. Not the least of the benefits he has derived from his association with radio is the fact that it has provided him with another rich source of anecdotal material. 'In the early days of radio," he says, 'we used to have a tele-phone man on the etail. His only job would be to telephone people during the broadcasts to find out if anyone could hear us. Our equipment was so bad that a lot of the time they couldn't even hear the telephone man "

Despite his success on radio, Kinau rareappears on television. He finds the studio atmosphere, the brusqueness of the telecast procedure and the jungle of electronic gear, terribly impersonal. For those few appearances he has made on the homescreen, he has refused to wear makeup, possibly the only 84-year-old around to make that claim.

Nor does Kinau have a television set in his own home. There is no word for the machine in Plattdeutsch so he wouldn't even know how to order one, he says. "Besides," he adds, "My wife and I much prefer to look out the window."

The Playmate PEOPLE: Who Won't Be

Some time ago, Debbie Hanlon, a 19-year-old model, stretched out in the nude on a greenand-white polks-dotted sheet, The cameras clicked, and the April Playmate was born. Debbie, however, who'd already been on the November cover of Playboy magazine, began to have second thoughts. Were her religious convictions and her family's feelings worth the $5,000 she would earn as the girl on the center-fold? They were not. The young lady, from Royal Oak, Mich., began to pray over the affair, and at length notified the magazine that she would prefer to have the pictures scrapped, Publisher Hugh Heiner, after due deliberation, agreed.

"I'm proud of myself, really, that I was able to do it," said Debbie this week. "It may sound kind of stupid to other people, but I knew that morally it wasn't the right thing to do." After the November issue for which she was cover-girl, she recalled, her younger brother was teased at school. "The next time I was over at the house, he looked at me as if to say, What are you doing here?' Then he just said, Thanks a lot, Sis.'" Then and there Debbie decided to try to have the Playmate spread canceled. "The first time I told them." she said, "everyone laughed. They thought I was kidding . . . The next morning I got up and prayed like mad, and I told them I was really serious. It's a different world there [at Playboy? I don't really understand them. I'm not the party-type girl."

A 33-year-old Frenchman bid the world and his young wife an revoir yesterday and descended into a cave to live for six months "beyond time." Michel Siffre will test the limits of loneliness in a limestone cave 150 feet below the surface under a mountain 50 miles north of Del Rio, Texas, and when he finally rejoins the world, President Nixon will have gone to China, men will have flown again to the moon, and the Olympic Games will be about to start in Munich-none of which Siffre will be told about. They may not even tell me if World War III breaks out," said. the slender scientist, since the basic aim of the experiment is that the cave-dweller must have absolutely no clue as to the passage of time: no clocks, watches or calendars, no daylight and no

Debbie Hanlon

If Siffre'e theory is correct, he will eventually be sleeping 12 hours at a stretch and etaying awake for 36, though he will awake for 36, though he will not notice the change. Siffre, who helieves the transition into "Circadian Rhythm" is a biological fact, thinks it could lead to practical application in the oper. stion of manned spacecraft, international airline flights and nuclear submarines, all of which demand the crews live to some extent "beyond time." He will also gather data on the effects of "jet lag," the often uncomfortable legacy of air travel where people lose or gain a half-day or so on a single journey across time zones.

Wife Nathalie Siffre, 22, who married Michel only 14 months ago, is not crazy about the whole idea, especially since she will not even be permitted to speak to her husband on the special telephone on which Siffre alone will originate calls to the surface, and then only to transmit scientific data. "Ours," said Siffre, "must be a very pure relationship."

Late last month, a group of 5 train robbers raided a.. British train and made off with $91,000 worth of gold bullion Exactly 2 two weeks later, another band hit the same train at exectly the same spot where the first gang had struck, presumably under the impression that things like gold shipments are carried out with the usual British precision and regularity. They aren't Not that it was a total loss The thieves, reported London police, escaped with three pairs of shoes.
